Dear Ada Lovelace,

The Software Engineer opening is the first posting I have seen that calls a failed deploy a product bug. That is the job I want, on the team that already writes about releases that way.

The resume lists a 12-step release that became one command, and runbooks that made on-call quieter. The part that matters here is the habit under those lines. At Stack Overflow Overflow I sat with the person who ran the old checklist and deleted a step only after a release still worked. At Infinite Loop the runbooks were written for someone who had never seen the repo. I can bring that habit to a queue that already treats failure as a bug.

I am free for a conversation this month. Thank you for reading the application.

Yours sincerely,

John Doe
